Though Mike has spent his entire career representing the industry in regulatory matters, he is himself an avid outdoorsman and a mindful conservationist. After 20 years in the suburbs and commuting 9,000 cumulative miles to and from work, Mike recently moved to a modern, energy-efficient loft in the heart of Columbus' urban core. He now walks or rides public transit to work, no longer spreads gallons of fertilizer on his lawn, and heats and cools a home a fraction of the size of his prior suburban McMansion. All of this has led to cutting his carbon footprint in half. Mike's only long drives now consist of weekend travel to his outside interests, which include sporting clays and golf.
